

As senior editor of Roll Call newspaper, the leader in delivering Capitol Hill news since 1955, Ed Henry is famous for his inside scoops and irreverent flair. Firmly grounded in the political scene in Washington, he is one of the nation's leading experts on the political climate and legislative jockeying on the hill.

As one of the most influential political publications in the nation's capital, the non-partisan newspaper is closely read by lawmakers in both parties. Henry's political gossip column "Heard on the Hill," is known for combining bare-knuckles reporting with witty insights that make it a "must-read" among Washington insiders.

Henry is so wired to the backrooms of Washington that during a recent appearance on CNN's Inside Politics program he was introduced as one of the "most astute Capitol Hill reporters" in the business.

As one of the nation's leading experts on the political climate and legislative jockeying on the Hill, various networks—CNBC, CNN, C-SPAN, Fox News Channel, MSNBC and many others—frequently call upon Henry to provide cogent analysis. He also serves as a regular political commentator for WUSA-TV, the CBS affiliate in Washington, and WMAL, the ABC Radio affiliate in D.C.

Perhaps Henry's biggest exclusive came in January of 1998, when he secured the only newspaper interview with then-President Clinton on the day that the Monica Lewinsky story broke.

Henry cut his teeth as an investigative reporter by spending five years at the elbow of Pulitzer Prize-winning columnist Jack Anderson in the early 1990s. Having worked at the twice-weekly newspaper since April of 1996, he covered the Senate for Roll Call prior to becoming senior editor.

He is also a contributing editor at Washingtonian magazine and CNBC.com.

Uniquely qualified to provide valuable insights about the new balance of power on Capitol Hill, as well as forecast the 2004 Presidential race, Henry is a strong and affordable addition to any legislative meeting or forum. Bringing an infinite knowledge of politics and journalism, Henry is also unique and unmistakably funny at the podium.
