Strategic Workforce Planning for the Workplace of the Future
The technological and cultural landscapes are quickly changing, and the workforce must evolve or risk being left behind. The President’s Management Agenda has identified building the workforce of the future as a key pillar in the effort to keep current and modernize. Attendees will learn how the federal government is tackling the challenge and the ways agencies are utilizing their human capital strategies to ensure workers have the tools and skills needed to achieve the vision of creating a workforce for the 21st century.

Shared Services: A Force Multiplier for Multiple Cross-Agency Priority (CAP) Goals
Executives will discuss how shared service transformations accelerate the realization of CAP Goals beyond Sharing Quality Services. Attendees will learn how the various components of a shared service or service delivery transformation also serve to improve IT, data, customer experience and accountability while benefitting the government workforce.

How QSMOs Are Transforming the Marketplace
Learn how the Quality Service Management Offices (QSMOs) are designing and establishing the marketplaces for civilian HR transactions, core financial management, cybersecurity and grants management services. Panelists will share details on recent and planned accomplishments and how they stand to support agency customers.

-more-
