

Fred Bellemore has been an applied micro-economist for over 25 years. He earned a Sc.B (Applied Mathematics-Economics) from Brown University (1984) and a Ph.D. (Economics) from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (1992). In the 1990s, he spent eight years teaching statistics, econometrics, public finance, and environmental economics as an Assistant Professor at Vassar College. Since 2000, he has been practicing applied econometrics in Washington, DC. His career has spanned a myriad of applied economics fields, including health, transportation, labor, telecommunications, housing, and environmental economics, as well as public finance and industrial organization.